

Fortunate Teens Party With Morrissey - 24"x39" Latex On Wood 2009

There is a seldom-told story that Morrissey's tour bus broke down in small town Ohio in the autumn of 1994. A full day was necessary for the repairs to be completed and Morrissey and his band delighted local teenaged fans by stopping by a house party to drink beer and smoke marijuana. "It was the time of my life," remarks Tamara Marshall, who was hosting the party. "My parents were out of town and I was told not to have a party, but once Morrissey showed up I knew I wasn't going to be a secret for long." When asked what she remembered most about Morrissey's visit, Tamara answered, "He didn't like Rolling Rock beer".

This painting was a really big deal for three hours on the Internet on April 24th. Internet art critics are the very good at explaining art, so I will just make you a list of some of the things that were said about this painting (errors intact):

"morrissey did not tour the usa in 1994",

"Idea = AWESOME / Execution = slightly less awesome",

"What bugs me is that the phone that the "teen" on the right is talking into has only part of a cord, and no actual phone. That's just odd or sloppy."

"How vulgar and stupid. This is 4th grade bathroom humour--imbecilic all the way."

Haircuts: Try Them All! - 31"x31" Latex On Canvas 2009

Haircuts are pretty odd when you think about them. I mean, what is hair, like dead stuff that your body is rejecting? I don't really know if that is true, I do know that hair on the human body is in WEIRD PLACES. Why isn't there hair on the nose? I have some hair on my ears and I always worry that my girlfriend Amy will think it's gross. Finger and toenails are pretty gross too. ALL OF THAT STUFF IS GROSS, DON'T SCULPT IT.

Have A Balloon - 13"x15" Latex On Wood 2009

I am not at all trying to communicate any ideas or emotions with this painting.
