

Sitting Bull #1 - 15"x17" Latex & Ink On Wood 2009

George Custer failed his Tactics Class while he was a student at West Point Academy. Some time later during a battle they called Little Big Horn, Custer decided that he didn't need a big army to take out any number of natives and refused help during a battle with Sitting Bull. He was discovered later looking much like a porcupine. After the battle Sitting Bull went to Canada for donuts and hockey but came back to the states to ride a horse in a circle for Buffalo Bill Cody's Wild West show. He often yelled at and cursed the audience. After the Wild West show, Sitting Bull went home. White America was scared that Sitting Bull was going to join the Ghost Dance movement so they shot him to death outside of his cabin. Then his cabin was floated on a river to Chicago for the World's Exposition. It was at this Fair that Chicago became the "Windy City", named for a bunch of jerks that talked too much.

Smoking Penguins - 18"x24" Latex On Wood 2009

Man, penguins don't smoke. That's what's pretty good about life, SKY'S THE LIMIT.

Some Girls Love Vintage Clothing - 18"x18" Latex On Wood 2009

I have made and sold well over 30 copies of this painting. It usually sells to women who buy vintage clothing or own stores that sell vintage clothing.

Some Older Restaurant Signs - 84"x40" Latex On Bed Sheet 2009

Here's a collection of older restaurants signs. This is the hardest painting that I have ever made; in fact as I'm writing this, Amy is painting it. There's also a chance that it might not even fit into the van we've rented to drive to Oklahoma. So you might not even be looking at it. Sorry 'bout that!

Some Whites - 18"x18" Latex On Wood 2009

This is a painting of some white people that I found in an old yearbook. They were all white people, so I named it that. I wasn't implying anything else, YEESH.

Soviet Jackson - 96"x36" Latex On Wood With Glaze 2008

GEEZ, look at this giant shiny painting. Michael Jackson was a member of the Young Communist Party in Gary Indiana before he became a mega star. His father is a Scientologist. Janet Jackson is crazy!
